In 1990, the very first Western Colorado Community Forestry Conference was held at the Tamarron Resort north of Durango. The theme for that conference was Why trees?....A Look to the 90's. Over the next two decades community forestry programs would develop in communities where no program existed previously. New communities were being added to the growing list of Tree City USA communities. Towns and cities were completing tree inventories to learn more about their urban forest with the help of computers and innovative software. Trees were being planted as communities took advantage of grant dollars. Now here we are twenty years later, and Colorado's community forestry program has grown exponentially and is still moving forward. At this conference we will review Colorado's historic urban and community forestry program and look forward to the next twenty years.
